3/8/71

Dear Russ,

It has just come to me who it is in the picture you showed me and asked if I recognized him.

That is one special picture of Jack Youngblood, the one taken by the Miami police.

I also have one from Coward-McCann, hardback publisher of "Devil to Pay", used in their promotional work when the book first appeared. It shows him near a plane, wearing that big had, a parachute, a polo-shirt-like sweater and with a cigar cockily upward from the left side of his mouth, held by clenched teeth.

In it, while there is a clear resemblance, he also looks a bit different. It is a half-profile shot. The nose is sharperr and he seems to be wearing a very thing mustache. The mark over his right eyebrow is more pronounced in it. The cast of the jaw seems different in the different shots, enough to confuse in identification.

Glad to lend it to you if you'd like.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg